E. Stanley Jones wrote about a fictional person who lived out a fantasy life. All he had to do was think of it and it happened. So this man in a moment of time stuck his hands in his pockets, leaned back and imagined a mansion and he had a 15 bedroom mansion, three stories, with soft footed servants to wait upon his every need.

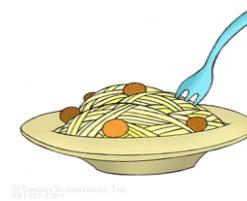

A place like that needs several fine cars, so he again closed his eyes, and he imagined the driveway full of the finest cars that money could buy. He drove them where ever he wished, or he sat in the back of the car as a chauffeur drove him wherever he wished.

There was no other place to travel so he returned home and wished for a sumptuous meal and suddenly there was a meal in front of him in all its fragrance and beauty which he ate alone. But there's still something needed more than that.

Finally he grew bored and unchallenged, and he whispered to one of the attendants, "I want to get out of this. I want to create something. I want to earn something. I even want to suffer some things again. I rather be in hell then be here." To which the servant quickly replied, "where do you think you are?"
